Open Spaces Report

The main item concerned Trees. The Trees Group now contains people of considerable professional experience. It is headed by John Budd, (john.15.budd@hotmail.com) a former officer on the staff of the Forestry Commission, who has recently been joined by Anna Lewington (anna@anna-lewington.co.uk). She is an ethnobotanist, studying the uses that people make of plants, and has worked at Kew; she has published a number of books on trees, and John Short, her partner, has 40 years' experience as a horticultural consultant in plant nutrition and growing media, and has run a tree nursery.

All three strongly support the idea of more tree planting in the town. They liked the idea of a tree at Poet's corner, at the bottom of the pedestrian section of Station Road, if ground planting were to be possible., but they were concerned about the possibility of using planters in the town centre to avoid problems with underground services. They were worried about the maintenance issues associated with caring for trees in planters. To quote John Short: "It is perfectly possible to grow and maintain a very good tree in the right-sized container with constant nutrition and irrigation, but the practical reality is that other than in a specialist nursery such a tree is almost impossible to maintain and will not thrive; it will become an embarrassment rather than a positive feature of the town".

All three are very keen to help in any way that they can. In, 2009 the Trees Group produced a list of potential planting sites, which they would be delighted to discuss with the group working on enhancement of the town, and I believe that they would be able to offer useful advice.

Two other points involve the future of the Open Spaces Group. The members of the Group wish to express their very warm appreciation of the approval given by the Council for them to meet in the Council Chamber. And the problem of handling the Group’s finances has been solved by the Sturminster Newton Community Benefit Society, which runs the Community chest, and which has agreed to hold a sub-account for the Group to replace that previously operated by SturQuest.
